PLUTO'S PRIZE

"Minnie, how would you like to go up to Holiday Hotel for their big Snow Carnival?" asked Mickey one day.

"Oh, I'd love to," exclaimed Minnie, eagerly. "I've never seen one, and I'm sure Clarabelle hasn't, either."

"Maybe we could get Goofy to go, too," continued Mickey. "It should be lots of fun. The mountain resort people are planning all sorts of exciting things."

"I'll call Clarabelle and Goofy right now and ask them to come over, so we can begin making plans, while you go and make the reservations," said Minnie.

"Swell, I'll see you later," called Mickey, as he left the house.

"Are you going to try for any of the prizes?" asked the reservation clerk at the downtown ticket office. "They've got some good ones for skating, skiing, tobogganning, snowshoe racing, and even making a snowman."

"Oh, sure," answered Mickey gayly. "We'll try for 'em all. That way one of us ought to win something!"

Later, back at Minnie's, Mickey explained about the carnival and all the events.

"I've always wanted to be a fancy ice skater," confessed Minnie. "So, I'll enter that division."

"Goofy, your long legs ought to be good on skis," smiled Mickey. "Is it okay if I enter you for skiing?"

"Shore, Mickey. I'll ski-daddle right into first place," chuckled Goofy.

"Don't forget about me," said Clarabelle, with concern. "My little red sled should be a sure winner in the toboggan races."

"Let's see," mused Mickey, "that leaves only the snowshoe race. I guess I'd better enter that, cause I'm light and won't sink into the snow as quickly as the big fellows."

"Gawrsh," beamed Goofy, "we've got the prizes all tooken already. When do we go get 'em?"

"Tomorrow morning. We'll have to get an early start. I'll pick you up in my car . . ." When Mickey mentioned "car," Pluto, who had been napping in the corner, pricked up his ears and trotted over to Mickey.

"Oh, so you want to come, too, do you, old fellow? Well, you won't know what's going on, but I can't leave you behind," said Mickey, scratching Pluto behind the ears.

"I should say not," retorted Minnie. "I'll pack his nice red sweater and he'll be all set."

Arriving at the hotel early the next morning, the four friends, with Pluto, found that the events were just about to begin. First on the schedule was the figure skating, so Mickey took Minnie over to the rink and helped her put on her skates. When her turn came, Minnie gracefully skated across the rink. A twist, a twirl, then OOPS — Minnie's skate blades crossed, and she landed on the ice with a sharp thud!

"Oh, dear," cried Minnie in despair. "I guess I just wasn't meant to be a real skating star."

Meanwhile, Goofy was joining the skiers at the top of the hill. Full of confidence, he clamped on his skis and took off in a flurry of fine snow. Opening his eyes about mid-way down the slope, Goofy, too late, saw himself heading straight for a large fir tree. CRASH! Goofy's chance for winning the race went shooting down the hill, along with both skis.

"Wal, what do yuh know!" sputtered Goofy, pulling his head out of a snowbank.

Though Clarabelle tried hard, her little red sled was no match for the sleek toboggans, and she, too, finished out of the running.

Poor Mickey, on his snowshoes, fared no better. Before he had gone twenty feet, his snowshoes tangled on some protruding roots, and he was disqualified.

"Well, there's only one more event — building the snow man," sighed Mickey. "We'll have to hurry if we want to compete. Everyone else is finished."

"Let's build us one of them hunters," suggested Goofy. "We can get an old broomstick fer a gun."

While Mickey and the gang had been rushing about entering all the activities, poor Pluto had found himself alone. Feeling very much left out of the festivities, he amused himself chasing squirrels on the snowy slope behind the hotel. Slipping and sliding on top of the hill, Pluto had a wonderful time. Then, suddenly, he lost his balance! End over end, went Pluto, rapidly snowballing down the hill! Faster, faster, and faster he rolled, until he hit bottom — and came to a quick stop next to the snow-man hunter his friends had just finished.

"I say, what is this?" asked one of the judges, stopping to inspect the figures.

Just then Pluto's wet nose poked out of the huge ball of snow. A snowy head and four feet soon followed.

"A hunter and his dog," cried the judges in delight. "This is the best thing we've seen. The first prize in the Holiday Hotel's snow-man building contest is yours."

"Oh, Mickey, isn't that wonderful," exclaimed Minnie. "We've won!"

At that one of the judges turned, frowning. "How many is we?" he asked.

"Well, there's Goofy and Clarabelle, too," began Minnie. "Oh, dear! Is that too many?" she asked anxiously.

"No," smiled the judge. "You'll all get a week's vacation at Holiday Hotel." Then turning to Pluto, he added, "But don't forget your dog — he's a smart one. He really won the prize for you, you know."

"And to think I said Pluto wouldn't know what it was all about," laughed Mickey, giving Pluto a big hug.

Pluto grinned and barked happily. He still did not know what was happening, but he did know he had the best prize in the world — Mickey's love and affection!
